FINAL REPORT

OF THE

PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL.

On December 30, 1918, there was submitted to you the second report of the Provost Marshal General, embracing the operation of the selective draft between the dates of December 30, 1917, and the date of the second report. That last report was voluminous and comprehensive in its scope. It went minutely into the diverse ramifications of the selective-service organization, its varied and novel activities, and the results thereof. The report was submitted after the signing of the armistice and at a date when it had been definitely concluded to demobilize the selective-service organization. Since the submission of the second report of the Provost Marshal General, the activities of the selective-service organization have been devoted chiefly to its own demobilization.

There ought, however, to be enumerated the several steps immediately following the signing of the armistice on November 11 which you directed to be taken prior to the commencement of the actual demobilization of the selective-service system itself. On November 11, on which date approximately a quarter of a million selectives were to begin mobilization, all calls for the Army were canceled. At that time the local and district boards had gone two months deep into the task of classifying the registrants who had been enrolled on September 12, 1918. Those registrants comprised all men between the ages of 18 and 45 who had not theretofore registered. The local boards had been instructed, first to classify the registrants coming within the age group 19–36, second those within the 37–45 group, and finally the 18-year-old group. When the armistice was signed, the work of classifying the first group had been practically completed, and in many instances the work of classifying the second was well under way. The problem that was presented to you and to this department was whether or not it would be wise or necessary further to continue the classification of the remaining registrants of September 12, 1918. On November 11, at your direction, State headquarters and local and district boards were directed to discontinue all work connected with the classification of registrants over the age of 37 but to continue to completion the classification of registrants between the ages of 19 and 36, inclusive, and to proceed immediately to the classification of registrants who had attained their eighteenth year but who had not attained their nineteenth year. Undoubtedly a complete classification of the entire registration between the ages of 18 and 45 would have produced very interesting information. But the Nation had been through such strenuous days and the stress and strain of the emergency had been so severe that you wisely concluded that the value of such a complete classification would be far out-weighed by relief from the onerous duties with which the selective-service organization had been burdened through the preceding 18 months.

On November 13, all mobilization calls for the Navy were canceled, and on the 16th all physical examinations were ordered discontinued and district boards directed to cease work upon classification and appeals. On November 19, local boards were directed to complete, at the earliest possible moment, the classification of those registrants with whom your prior order had directed them to proceed and to seal their records not later than December 10, 1918.

At the beginning of the selective draft, arrangements had been made with the State Department under which any person of military age desiring to leave the United States was required to secure from the Provost Marshal General a permit for passport. This duty was subsequently placed on the local boards, who continued to examine into the merits of such cases and to issue the necessary permits in the name of the Provost Marshal General. With the signing of the armistice, the necessity for retaining within the borders of the United States those citizens who were liable to early call for military service ceased, and on November 25, 1918, local boards were directed to discontinue the work and thereafter no permits were required from the War Department as prerequisite to departure from the United States.

On November 28, State headquarters were directed to begin immediately the demobilization of inducted men who had been assigned to State headquarters, district, local, and medical advisory boards for clerical duty, and on the next day instructions were issued for the discharge of temporary clerks as soon as their services could be dispensed with and for the discharge of permanent clerks on not more than 30 days' notice. Instructions, however, were issued that chief clerks should continue their duties until further notice from the Provost Marshal General.

On November 27, it was determined that all the records of the selective-service organization should be taken from the control of the Provost Marshal General and delivered to The Adjutant General of the Army in the city of Washington for final keeping. Henceforth, the activities of the Provost Marshal General's office and the various State and local agencies were confined to delivering all their records to The Adjutant General and to the demobilization of the selective-service system. At this date all the records of the draft have been delivered to The Adjutant General of the Army, in whose care they will remain.

On December 6, in pursuance of the plan to turn over all draft records to The Adjutant General, the selective-service agencies were directed to proceed with the preliminary arrangement of their records along lines which were outlined by the Provost Marshal General. The arrangement was necessary for an orderly closing up of the records of the selective-service organization prior to their shipment to The Adjutant General.

It will be remembered that December 10 had originally been designated as the date upon which all records were to be closed. But the task of assembling and adjusting the files and records of the boards in order that they might be received by The Adjutant General of the Army from the selective-service agencies throughout the country in a uniform way made it imperative to keep the records of the boards open until after December 10 to enable the Provost Marshal General's office to provide a procedure for closing them that would insure their advantageous reassembling in Washington where they were ultimately to be lodged.

Thus far I have stated chronologically the several orders issued preliminary to the demobilization of the selective-service system. But your attention ought to be called to the fact that, while this task is simply stated, it involved considerations of the greatest import. Within the records of the boards were contained the war histories of nearly 24,000,000 Americans. Upon some of them was written a record of patriotism to which those registrants and their descendants would look with greatest pride; upon others was a record of ignominy and unpunished delinquency that the Nation could not afford to leave undealt with. The pride, the sorrow, the sacrifice and the patriotism of the Nation were contained within the records of the local boards.

But it was more than a matter of sentiment that prompted a scrupulous preservation of those records. Never in the history of this or any other nation had a more valuable and comprehensive accumulation of data been assembled upon the physical, economic, industrial, and racial condition of a people. It contained the first and only record of the man power of this Nation. It would be of untold value to the physician, the economist, the sociologist and the historian for many decades. It was not only worthy of preservation, but this generation owed it to posterity that it be preserved.

You will see that it was a vitally important task properly to assemble these records. The task was no less important than it was tremendous. Scattered throughout the breadth of the land, lying in the offices of the 4,648 local boards, 155 district boards, 1,319 medical advisory boards, and 52 State headquarters were the records of nearly 24,000,000 men.

It was necessary, before assembling all these records, to bring about a uniform system of filing them in order to avert certain confusion when they were finally gathered en masse. When it is considered that these records, as assembled, made up a file of cases which, if placed end to end, would make a line 50 miles long, and contained a volume of 400,000 cubic feet of paper, requiring approximately 10 acres of floor space for their accommodation, the magnitude of the task that confronted the department when it began their assembling can well be envisioned.

It was not only an important task and a tremendous one, but it was approached under conditions that did not augur well for its success. For many months the members of the selective-service organization had devoted themselves unsparingly to the execution of heart-breaking duties. That service had been unselfish, but it had been exerted under the stress and excitement of a call that would brook no delay. The stimulus of war had been there. But now those same men, weary from the strain of many months of service, suddenly relieved from the tension of the war, were again called upon, in time of peace, to perform a task that was no less onerous than that which they had so patriotically assumed in the Nation's hour of peril. It is but one further testimonial of the unselfish loyalty of the members of the selective-service organization that not one single obligation laid upon them in these post-bellum days was shirked and that the work of the selective-service organization after the signing of the armistice proceeded with the same dispatch and efficiency as had characterized its activities during the war.

On December 23, 1918, after a series of conferences between the officers of The Adjutant General's Office, the Provost Marshal General's Office, and the draft executives from practically all of the States, the regulations which were to govern the disposition of the records of all draft boards were promulgated. The regulations provided for a careful checking of every paper within the files of local, district, and medical advisory boards. Roughly outlined, the scheme for closing up the records divided itself into two parts: First, the checking, closing, packing, and shipping of all records of the draft agencies, except those pertaining to delinquents and deserters; and, secondly, the disposition of delinquency and desertion records.

The reason for this division is quite apparent, Many thousands of men, in the rush and hurry of war-time activities, had been reported by their local boards either as delinquents or deserters. It had always been well known that many of the men carried on the rolls of their local boards as delinquents or deserters were not, in fact, such. Many of them had enlisted voluntarily in our own Army and in the armies of our Allies. Many had changed their place of residence and, through mistake, ignorance, or mishap, had failed to receive the notices to which they would willingly have responded had they been received. The sense of fair play that had characterized the draft throughout its administration demanded that the stigma of delinquency be removed in every case in which a reasonable doubt existed as to the actual guilt of the registrant.

To accomplish such a result it was necessary that a careful and discriminating survey be made of every case of desertion or delinquency. To this end local boards were required carefully to examine the cases of all registrants who were carried on their rolls as delinquents or deserters and to insert in the files of these registrants signed memoranda giving every detail in regard to the status of these men which was personally known to the board or any member thereof, or which might be secured from the relatives or friends of the registrant. These delinquency and desertion records were then transmitted to State headquarters, where they were given a second examination by a corps of trained inspectors and clerks, assisted by representatives of the Department of Justice and, in the majority of cases, by the United States district attorney of the particular judicial district. This second examination at State headquarters resulted in the elimination there of many reported cases of desertion and delinquency where the facts demonstrated that registrants were not, in fact, in a status of desertion or delinquency.

After this examination in State headquarters, the desertion records were transmitted direct to the Provost Marshal General's Office, where they were given a final, careful inspection with the view to purging the list of the names of all men whom the final examination disclosed to have been erroneously reported as deserters.

The records in delinquency cases were shipped direct to The Adjutant General of the Army, the representatives of the Department of Justice retaining for their future reference the necessary extracts from these records and forwarding their reports to the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice for further action of the civil authorities.

You will therefore perceive that the final shipment of records resulted in lodging at once the greatest portion of them in the custody of The Adjutant General of the Army, in the city of Washington, and in turning over to the Provost Marshal General for inspection the records of desertion in the several States. These desertion records, after examination in the Provost Marshal General's Office, were turned over finally to The Adjutant General of the Army, together with a list of all registrants who were finally found to be in a status of desertion. Thus The Adjutant General of the Army became the final custodian of all records of the selective-service system.

It is not improper at this point to digress long enough to call your attention to the final results of the selective draft in respect of deserters. No one feature in the administration of the draft can be the occasion of greater pride. In my second report to you, statistics concerning desertion were available as of September 11, 1918, only. The available data at that time disclosed 474,816 registrants reported as deserters. After accounting for all those included in this total who should not properly have been classified as such, there remained a net total of 363,022 cases of desertion. At the time of my second report 67,838 men had been apprehended and their cases disposed of.

Final and complete statistics covering the entire operation of the draft up to July 15, 1919, show the following results which are truly remarkable:

Out of a registration of 23,908,576 men, there were reported 489,003 cases of desertion, or a total of 2.04 per cent of the total registration. Of this number, it appears that 151,354 cases were accounted for by enlistment in our own armies and those of our allies and erroneous induction of aliens and other registrants, so that the total of net desertions was reduced to 337,649, or 1.41 per cent of the total registration. Of this last number 163,738 men have been apprehended and their cases disposed of, leaving an actual balance of outstanding cases of desertion in which the offender has neither been accounted for nor punished 173,911, or 0.72 of 1 per cent of the total registration. It therefore appears that out of a total registration of more than 23,000,000 men but 1.41 per cent wrongfully sought to escape the military obligation imposed upon them by the selective-service law, and that at the present time but 0.72 of 1 per cent of the entire registration group have failed to respond to the duty imposed upon them and have not yet been brought to justice. It also appears that between September 11, 1918, and June 30, 1919, 95,900 deserters have been apprehended and delivered to the military authorities for disposition. It is thought that within the next 12 months the total of net outstanding desertions will be materially reduced, so that the final result will show a percentage very much less than the present low figures stated above.

In the work of rounding up deserters after the armistice, the splendid results achieved by the Department of Justice and the police officials in the various States ought not to be overlooked. It is to their vigilance and untiring effort that the substantial reduction of the outstanding cases within the past nine months has been due.

Immediately after the promulgation of the regulations governing the disposition of records, the various draft agencies began the final work of closing out their records. Supervised by the Provost Marshal General's Office, upon which the most urgent demands had been made that the work of demobilization be completed at the earliest possible date, the draft boards began the execution, in January, 1919, of a task that might well have occupied them for many months.

During the early part of March, after a careful survey of the country, it was determined that the work of all draft boards in the United States, by calling upon the draft agencies to exert a special effort to do so, could be completed by March 31, 1919. Accordingly, on March 8, the Secretary of War directed that the work of closing up local, district, and medical advisory boards be completed not later than March 31.

It was but another test of the efficiency of the system. Under ordinary circumstances the work that remained to be performed in early March would easily have consumed several months, but upon the urgent request made upon them local boards bent themselves to the labor of closing out their offices with such zeal that on March 31 every draft board within the United States, with the exception of three, had filed, packed, sealed, and shipped its records. It is only fair to say that, as to the three boards that did not ship their records on March 31, everything had been done by them preliminary to their shipment, but that, by reason of their inaccessibility to transportation, final consignment was delayed for several days after March 31.

Thus it was that the final act of the selective-service system evidenced the same devotion to the performance of duty and the same untiring efficiency that marked the execution of every demand that was made upon it from the very first days of the war.

After March 31 the several State headquarters continued in operation for a little over a month for the purpose of winding up general matters of the administration in their respective States. Between May 6 and May 21, all State headquarters completed their work and on the last-named date the last of the State headquarters was demobilized. Thus, before the 1st of June, nothing remained of the selective-service organization within the States. The Provost Marshal General's Office alone remained in existence for the purpose of winding up the national administration of the draft. By July 15 the final steps had been taken in the Provost Marshal General's Office, and on that day I was formally relieved from duty as Provost Marshal General; the last act of the selective-service system had been performed and the organization terminated as of that day.

It has already been mentioned in this report that certain of the statistical tables embodied in the second report of the Provost Marshal General were based upon incomplete statistical data from the several States. The information upon which the tables of the second report were based was collected during the month of September, 1918, at a time before the classification of the registrants enrolled on September 12, 1918, had begun and when the excitement of mobilizing men rendered it practically impossible to secure full and complete returns upon all phases of administration. However, after the signing of the armistice and before the local boards closed their records, they were again called upon to submit complete returns covering their work from the time of their organization until December 30, 1918. The data thus collected are of prime importance, because they represent the final statement of the operation of the draft upon questions of classification, mobilization, desertion, delinquency, and fiscal arrangements.

There are several matters in connection with these tables to which your particular attention ought to be directed. For the first time the Nation has available a complete survey of its industrial and military man power. Out of a total registration of 23,908,576 men, the draft organization classified all with the exception of 6,319,728 men, 5,519,722 of whom were registrants within the age group of 37 to 45 years, the classification of which group was discontinued by your order on November 11, 1918. The figures secured through this classification, therefore, represent a very comprehensive basis upon which the man power of this country may be computed in the event of future necessity.

On November 11, 1918, the date upon which the armistice was signed, there were, according to the latest available information, in the military service of the United States approximately three and one-half million men. Of this number 2,758,542 had been furnished by the selective-service organization. The remainder had entered the fighting forces of the United States through the processes of voluntary enlistment.

On November 11, there had been finally classified, physically examined, and found qualified for general military service but not yet inducted 1,426,446 men. On the same date, there had been classified in Class I but not yet physically examined 1,216,017 men, while 6,319,728 men had not yet been classified. Upon the basis of previous experience in the operation of selective service, these totals would eventually have produced 3,630,106 men in Class I, qualified for general military service. It will be remembered that the selective-service organization, up to the signing of the armistice, had inducted 2,758,542 men. When there is added to this number the number which would eventually have become available as general fighting men (3,630,106), it appears that the total fighting forces comprised of general-service men which selective service would have been able to furnish for the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, had the exigencies of the emergency made it necessary to exhaust the total fighting forces of the Nation, would have been 6,388,648.

When there is added to this number, which the selective-service organization might have produced, the total of voluntary enlistments in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, it results that the United States could have put into the field 7,850,524 men without invading any of the deferred classes, constituted under the selective-service law and regulations.

But these figures do not take into consideration the men classified in Class I but not available for general military service by reason of minor physical defects, either remediable or not. The total of uninducted remediables and limited-service men in Class I was 899,040. When this number is added to the above total of Class I men inducted into the service and who would have eventually become available for general military duty, it results that the total fighting forces which America could have placed upon the field, without invading any of the deferred classes, was 8,749,564 men.

Not the least interesting information that the final compilation of statistics concerning the operation of the draft discloses is its cost. The total amount appropriated by the Congress for the expenses of the selective-service system was $54,896,903. Of this amount, $30,847,914.24 was expended and the balance either returned to the Treasurer of the United States or transferred to the Director of Finance. Upon the basis of these expenditures, it appears that the per capita cost per registrant was $1.26; per registrant classified, $1.74; per man inducted, $10.38; and per man accepted at camp, $11.34. When the cost per accepted man ($11.34) is compared with the cost per man secured by voluntary enlistment in the Army ($28.95) and in the Navy ($30.23) it is apparent that from a standpoint of national economy, nothing was lost by the recruitment of our fighting forces through selective processes. Comparing the cost per accepted man under the selective-service law with the corresponding cost per man under the Civil War enrollment act, one finds that the cost under the latter legislation was, per capita, $217.87 for bounty and $9.84 for operating expenses, a total of $227.71, against a per capita cost of $11.34 under the selective-service law.

In my second report, at page 210 thereof, under the title "North Carolina," there was contained a statement relative to delinquents and deserters in that State which was not accurate in all its details. The errors in that portion of the text of my second report were discovered after its publication and immediate steps were taken at that time to correct them. I feel, however, that in justice to the State of North Carolina, and pursuant to my promise to the authorities of that State, made after the discovery of the error in my second report, a corrected statement of the incident referred to ought to be republished in this final report to you. The statement as corrected is therefore appended to this report, appearing as Appendix C hereof.

In my second report to you I stated in a footnote on page 95 that the case of John Napore v. James H. Rowe and others was pending on appeal in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. It will be recalled that the district court, on its hearing on a writ of habeas corpus, held that the rules and regulations promulgated by the President under the authority vested in him by virtue of the provisions of the selective-service law were null and void in so far as they related to nondeclarant aliens, and further held that it was necessary, in order to establish the induction of any registrant, to show affirmatively that his local board had performed every step in the process of induction prescribed by the regulations, upon the ground that local boards were inferior tribunals as to which no presumption in favor of their performance of official duties could be indulged.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in reversing the district court, overruled the decision of the lower court upon every point, and not only sustained the validity of the rules and regulations governing the selective-service system, but based its decision upon the implied premise that local boards were executive tribunals of a high order and that the legal presumption that such high tribunals performed every duty imposed by law was applicable to them.

This decision of the circuit court of appeals is the last word that has been said by the courts upon questions growing out of the operation of the selective draft. The legal status of draft boards has thus been happily stated, for the court has declared that they, in law, occupy a position which, in fact, is theirs beyond all doubt. The boards were, indeed, tribunals of a high order, and it is no bare legal theory to say that they performed every obligation that was by law imposed upon them.

In my prior reports to you I have repeatedly called your attention to the splendid and devoted efforts of the members of these boards and of the State officials, from governor down, who were connected with the administration of the draft. In concluding this, my final report to you, I can not forbear to say again that whatever success was achieved in the administration of selective service was due to the unselfish and devoted efforts of these men. Never in the history of the Nation had there been a more urgent call for the unselfish exercise of patriotism and never has there been a more universal and whole-souled response than was found in the administration of the selective draft.

There are now pending in Congress two joint resolutions and two bills the purpose of each of which is to recognize the service rendered by the civilian members of the selective-service organization during the war and to extend the thanks of Congress to them for the tasks which they so splendidly performed. It is true that other civilian organizations, during the emergency, performed great and unselfish labors. But the relation of the personnel of the selective-service system to the prosecution of the war was peculiar. Linking itself directly with the Military Establishment, it contributed in the most vital way to the recruitment of our armies and to the successful conclusion of hostilities. I know that the rush and press of other urgent business before the present Congress has been the cause of its failure yet to adopt any of the measures to which I have just referred. But in concluding this, my final report to you, I feel that, in justice to those men who contributed so much and so unselfishly to the great labor of the past two and one-half years, I must urge that you use the weight of your influence in securing a prompt recognition on the part of Congress of those services. Until that shall have been done, I shall feel that my work as Provost Marshal General is in some measure incomplete and that there has been a failure to recognize, as it should be recognized, a most potent factor in America's achievement.

APPENDIX C.

STATEMENT RELATIVE TO EVASION OF THE DRAFT IN NORTH CAROLINA SUPPLEMENTAL TO THE SECOND REPORT OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The following statement under the heading "North Carolina," relative to delinquents and deserters in North Carolina, is in substitution for those portions of my second report to the Secretary of War, under date of December 20, 1918, beginning on page 210, line 22, with the words "North Carolina," and ending on page 212 at line 32 with the words "to camp," which portions of my second report are, by permission of the Secretary of War, stricken therefrom:

North Carolina: In North Carolina a condition arose which, for a time seriously menaced the effective administration of the draft in two of the mountain counties of that State. Through ignorance some of the young men failed to register; others who had registered refused to answer the call to the colors.

The story is best told by Capt. T. B. McCargo, jr., assistant to the adjutant general of North Carolina, in the administration of the draft, who renders the following account of the draft resistance in Mitchell and Ashe Counties in North Carolina:

In the spring of 1918, there were 13 deserters at large in Mitchell County, N. C. Most of them had come home on furlough and had failed to return at the proper time. The sheriff and other local officers were unsuccessful in their attempts to capture them, or probably made no serious effort to effect a capture. About the last of May, 1918, one of these deserters reported to John C. McBee, chairman of the local board for Mitchell County, at Bakersville, N. C., and stated that he was anxious to return to camp. The idea then occurred to Mr. McBee that he could use this man as a means of getting into communication with other deserters in the county, and through him urge such deserters to surrender themselves voluntarily to the local board with the assurance that he, the chairman, would go with them to camp and ask that they be given lenient treatment in view of their voluntary surrender. Through this deserter and the friends and relatives of all deserters and delinquents in Mitchell County, these men were reached and urged to come forth and present themselves for duty. This plan was put into execution by the chairman of the local board with the approval and cooperation of Special Agent Frederick C. Handy, of the Investigation Bureau of the Department of Justice, and with the knowledge and approval of Maj. John D. Langston, military aid to the governor of North Carolina. How well it succeeded is best told by the report of McBee, who happens to be an old Army man with a record of 10 years' service in the Philippines. The report follows:

"CAMP SEVIER, S. C., June 9, 1918.

"Maj. JOHN D. LANGSTON,

"Special Aide to Governor Bickett, Raleigh, N. C.

"DEAR MAJOR: Mr. Frederick C. Handy, special agent, Department of Justice, and I sent nine delinquents to Camp Jackson yesterday and delivered 13 deserters to divisional adjutant, Camp Sevier, to-day. That cleans up all Mitchell County deserters from any of the camps and all delinquents, except one, known to be in the county. Several delinquents outside of county and State. Ten-day passes were given all deserters and delinquents in Mitchell County by the local board with the approval of Mr. Handy. Sheriff Burleson and many citizens of the county aided greatly in inducing both deserters and delinquents to come in. All deserters have borne their own expenses returning to camp and in all those units, to which they belong, are still here, are assigned to their old organizations and those whose units are 'gone over' are detained in custody till the latter part of the week when they will go to the point of embarkation.

"Respectfully submitted, JOHN C. MCBEE, Chairman, Local Board, Mitchell County."

At another time a number of deserters were at large in Ashe County, N. C., and the authorities thought a general round up necessary in order to return these men to duty. Hearing of this, Gov. T. W. Bickett sent a telegram to Jefferson, the county seat, stating that he would be there on the following Saturday and would address the people at the court house. He asked that the news of his coming be sent to every "nook and corner" of Ashe County and that a special effort be made to have the friends and relatives of all deserters in attendance. The governor spoke at the appointed time and place to an audience that more than filled the courthouse. He showed in an eloquent address, such as but few men can make, that the people of Ashe County were vitally interested in this war, and that the men of the mountains should come forth and do their full duty as they have done so well in the past wars. The result was that in less than two weeks, practically every deserter known to be in Ashe County had surrendered and returned to camp.

The people in these mountains are very patriotic, and when their path of duty was made clear they responded eagerly to the call. There was probably as small a number of draft resistants in this section as in any section of the country. This fact will appear from an examination of the statistics on deserters and delinquents. It is also a fact that men from this section formed a part of the Thirtieth or "Wild Cat" division which is officially credited with having broken the Hindenburg line.
